*Deceased.

Geo. S. Stafford, of the Senior Class, is an easy winner in the race for class infant, and Vincent D. Wyman carries away the laurels in the Junior.

Most Popular Man (by vote). Owing to his "editorial pull" and unlimited opportunities for stuffing the ballot box, John E. Amos succeeds in crediting himself with 81 votes for "most popular man," with Everett and Hartman bringing up a close second. In the Junior Class, the ballot is about equal between Fred R. Pratt and A. E. Wilson. (A number suggest that the term "popular man" be changed to "popular junior," so as to give the ladies a show.)

Handsomest Man (by vote). That we are not united in our views as to what features characterize a "homely man" and a "beauty" is shown by the fact that the same man wins for both. A number voted for themselves, some expressing the belief that they have looked in the mirror and ought to be able to judge. We omit the names on the grounds of public policy.

For Favorite Professor (by vote). For "favorite professor" the ballot stands about equal in the Junior Class between Judge Carter and Adelbert Hamilton. In the Senior, Judge Shepard is an easy winner, and the Post invariably cast their ballot in favor of Judge Moran.

All classes are unanimous in making Real Property the "most difficult" study, and Contracts and Domestic Relations the "easiest."

E stand in a century's twilight. The cycle which dawned upon the glory of Napoleon is drawing to its close amidst the splendor of the victories of peace. Tell us not that man dies and time lives on, for this century shall be laid in the grave of the past, but we shall live on to see the glories of its successor! But our hearts shall often turn to the past to live again the strong days of youth. They shall glow and quicken on recalling the time when we became students of the law.

From Junior to Post Graduate—from Blackstone's definition of law to the degree! Let the record be a mingling of dates and events, for the class of '95 has seen more of the latter than of the former; it has much besides figures to remember.

September of 1893 was drawing to a close when we first met, for the White City's influence was felt even by the Chicago College of Law. As we listened to Judge Bailey's opening words of counsel, we felt that we too were called to guard the fires in the temple of justice. And almost with a feeling of reverence we turned to Sir William's Commentaries, Vol. I, book 1, page 1. That feeling has long since given way to one of familiarity, and even now our dreams are sometimes disturbed by the memory of an eighty-page lesson.

Some weeks later we engaged in our first mutual enterprise when we chartered a special car to go to Evanston to see Northwestern's people defeat the black and red on the foot-ball gridiron. Some of us were Evanston boys, and remembered Benedict Arnold as we cheered Lake Forest on. Returning to Chicago we were compelled to lock the brakemen and conductor out of the car when they sought to disturb our revelry.

Winter succeeded Autumn and Spring came after both. We learned to know each other and soon had our set of class characters. Thos. J. Morgan, the champion of the masses, Justice Dooley, Representative Novak, the genial Burroughs, the profound Finn, "louder" Beckerman, Pratt with his genius for leadership, and many others became familiar figures. Often an unexpected answer or witty sally would call forth laughter and applause to relieve the monotony of a two-hour recitation. Our fair sister-in-law, Miss D——, rose one evening to interrogate Judge Moran regarding the rights and duties attached to an engagement ring. I—— insisted that marriage could be no contract unless specific performance could be obtained, and G——, once when unexpectedly called upon, frankly confessed to being unprepared, but naively offered to "make a bluff at it." "It is useless for you to offer an opinion upon a question of pleading unless you have studied it. You may sit down, sir," answered Judge Bailey, with great dignity of countenance, but the old-time twinkle in his eye. Once when reading to us a statute on gaming, he paused after the words "confidence game" long enough to add, "with which, gentlemen, I have no doubt but that you are all familiar."

With occasional incidents of this kind, sundry stormy class meetings and much midnight reading of calf-bound volumes, our first year wore away, culminating in the memorable banquet at the Grand Pacific and Gallagher's splendid effort as class orator.

Our junior class numbered about two hundred, and was the first one requiring a division of the class into two sections. When we reassembled in the autumn of '94, some of the old faces were missing, but we saw many new ones to take their places. After the summer's vacation, it was a treat to return to such substantial reading as Gould's Pleadings and Story's Equity Pleadings, about which W—— once sagely remarked: "A man can't read this and think of his girl at the same time."

The Chicago Law Students' Association, which was formed at this period, owes its inception largely to members of our class, and we have watched with pride its growth and influence. No one who was present at the tumultuous convention of the three Law Schools held in the Masonic Temple will forget how F—, of our class, stood like Horatius of old and held at bay the opposition until the forces of the Chicago College of Law arrived.

During the spring of '95 the class worked hard to bring about two cherished plans — commencement exercises and a class picture. The former was relinquished in deference to the wishes of our respected Dean; the latter was accomplished and shall long stand as a monument to the industry of President Walter C. Hughes. The hundred classmates on that picture may perhaps never again be together; already he who “stood highest” is thousands of miles away on Alaskan gold-fields, and others have been called by duty or inclination to fields which, we believe, will yield them both gold and laurels. And it is our hope that some day we may single out on that picture one or more faces and say: “This is he at a time when greatness was only a dream of the future.”

In June of '95 we were graduated and admitted to the bar of the State of Illinois.

History of Senior Class of '96.

"Strange things you know will happen, Strange things the Lord permits."

At seven o’clock on a sweltering September evening in 1894, the first Tuesday of that month, Judge Joseph M. Bailey, Dean of the Chicago College of Law, met several young ladies and several score young men in the college rooms in the Athenaeum building. For almost an hour Judge Bailey discoursed on the grave study of the law; for almost an hour the class of ’96, then and there being born, perspired and pondered, listened and languished, waited and wondered. It was no light labor that brought forth ’96.

Judge Bailey painted the lawyer’s life in no roseate hue. He told us plainly that it meant work, hard work and plenty of it. He said that when as a boy he began reading law in an office in New York, a lawyer needed to read but comparatively few books. There was a set of book cases on one wall of that New York office that contained all the books necessary to read. Now the books are numberless. No man could read even a large portion of them. It is necessary to specialize. Were he a youth and had it all to begin over again, Judge Bailey intimated he should hesitate to enter on a law course. The venerable Dean, looking back from the goal over the path we had elected to walk, spoke these words as a kindly admonition, with no intention to discourage, albeit their effect was anything but inspiring. After Adelbert Hamilton, Esq., had said a few words, we of ’96 looked at each other, and each thinking perhaps (as he could have done with no undue self-esteem) that he had as good a chance as his neighbor, concluded we’d try it anyway. A lesson in Blackstone was assigned and we went out into the night. '96 was born. The first event of our class life had come, been and passed into history.

From that time to this our history has been like the woman question—bifurcated. We have been twins, so to speak. Too numerous for one, we were divided in two sections, between which a jealous rivalry sprang up. The primal cause was the manifest partiality of the faculty in assigning all the ladies to "B" section. Honored instructors were alternated between the sections to no purpose—the ladies were not—they remained fixtures in "B" section. Jealousy grew apace. "A" section learned that "B" had McClanahan, a Quinn, O'Brien and a Standard. "B" saw "A" graced with a Brown, an Everett and an Amos. Only recently have the twins come together and learned that they must bear their Hartmans, Lucases, Marshalls, J. M. Smiths, et id genus omne, as they must bear measles and whooping-cough, the necessary evils of childhood.

As the twins have grown in wisdom they have become more friendly, and recently Judge Burke successfully heard the two together. "A" section was "at home" to "B." The big three of the Wellington, Jones, Friend and Hoyt; Bauras, the modern Patrick Henry; the affable Jacobowsky; Coffeen, Henkel and Hapeman, the astute politicians; "Goo-Goo" Henry, Paderewski Firestone; Barnett, who's had a case already, sir; the loud-talking Carnahan, and all the rest, vied with each other in showing courtesy to the oily Mr. Stilwell, the retiring Sturgeon; to Meads, who Maxcy unkindly says resembles necessity in his relation to the law; to Stevens, who happened to be making his monthly visit to the class; to Stafford, who doesn't cut his hair, and to Luke T. O'Brien and McCabe, who don't have to cut theirs; to Voight, Jr., who looks more like a lawyer than Judge Moran, and to Mead, who thinks he knows more; to Woodworth, who, failing as a lawyer, can get a job as a wooden Indian for a cigar advertisement; to Preston, who thirsts for office; to Jo Shaw, who thinks he's pretty, and to Powell, who knows he is. Judge Burke took Stafford on his knee to keep the child quiet, and beautiful peace was over all.

Since that day the two sections of '96 have been on better terms. Our class-room history is only negatively noteworthy. In athletics section "A" organized a football team, whose excellence can be judged from the fact that the crack eastern teams refused to meet it.
The class numbers 246, divided as to nationality as follows: One Frenchman, one Austrian, one Bohemian, three Germans, three Swedes, four Englishmen, seventeen Americans and 214 Irishmen. All of the latter nationality expect to practice law — some of the others may.

For two years we have met three times a week; for two years we have wrestled with Blackstone, Kent, Walker, Bishop, Tiedeman, Story and Schouler; for two years been learning the truth of Judge Bailey's warning; but for two years we have all paid our full tuition and therefore expect to be admitted to the bar — ex contractu.

The history of the class of '96 ends with the banquet in a few weeks, but the history of the individuals composing the class will only then begin to be important.

In the future it will be pleasant to recall the two years spent in this law course. Much of our work has been enjoyed as it was being done — all will be pleasant to look back upon — hacce olim meminisse juvat.

History.

"Facts are the stuff of history." The class historian is a creature of circumstances. He is called upon to chronicle facts—not to write obituary notices. While his modesty may shrink from enlarging upon the good qualities and the noble record which the class of '97 has made, the facts remain and demand a hearing. Unassuming and unwarlike, we have presented a decided contrast to our arrogant and savage predecessors. Do not think because we are unassuming that we are not a remarkable class; on the contrary, we have always attracted attention.

When we came together in September of 1895, we found ourselves a body of men—and ladies—drawn from all nationalities and walks of life, and of various grades of education and ability, with but one feature common to us all—a hungering desire "to be admitted."

The chief peculiarities of those early days of the course were first, the inseparable fondness with which each lugged his Blackstone to every recitation, taking care that all beholders should see that it was a law book; and secondly, the trembling quality of our recitations, when men who shall in the future make the walls of the Clark street justice courts ring with their legal ign—we mean eloquence, stood with trembling limbs and "vox faucibus haesit," finally managing to stammer "Your Honor, I didn't get that far." We found ourselves divided alphabetically into two sections, and with a partiality that is to be severely condemned, all the ladies were in the down-stairs section.

Early in the term a meeting was held for class organization.
A young man with a great Head for parliamentary law took the chair and the performance began. There was noise enough to prevent one from thinking; however, it was found unnecessary to think, provided you could keep right on talking. Even at those early meetings the peculiarities of the members were strongly marked. We found that Mr. Donoghue's voice when he cried MR. CHAIRMAN, could be heard above a score of weaker-lunged shouters. It is rumored that once when the Grosse Point fog-horn was out of order, Mr. Donoghue was hired to sit up in the light-house and warn ships from coming within a mile of the shore.

We were lost in admiration of Mr. Dreutzer's elocution and Delsartean movements. They say he acquired them as Consul to Bergen, Norway, while trying to persuade the Norwegians to ship their cod liver oil to America instead of to England.

There was nobody in the class with a greater supply of points of order than Alderman "Pat" O'Neil. The Alderman has had great practice up there in the Evanston council, wrestling over sidewalks on Judson avenue and fire plugs at the intersection of Davis street and Chicago avenue. Whenever Pat wants to run for a city office we will all turn in and vote for him, no matter on what ticket.

With these gentlemen in the foreground and many others in the near distance, the class was organized with Mr. William Foster Burns as President. Mr. Burns possesses a diplomacy that would have enabled him to hold down Li Hung Chang's job during the late war without losing a single peacock feather. He can also skate through a recitation on a lesson he hasn't studied with as much dignity and grace as any one in the class.

During Mr. Burns' administration, the programs, thanks largely to the efforts of Mr. Ettleson, were excellent and well attended.

About this time the Law Students' Association elections took place and Mr. Harrison Jones was sent as Secretary to represent the class.

The association in which Mr. Jones is our representative gave a very successful entertainment during the winter, at which the eminent Michigan agriculturist, Mayor Pingree, was principal speaker. At the next election Mr. A. E. Wilson, who had been Vice-President, was elected to the Presidency. During this term, Moot Courts became the principal feature of the after meetings.
These exercises not proving a sufficient safety valve for all the eloquence of the members, another society was formed to meet Thursdays in the down-stairs room. Its Chairman is elected at each meeting; the permanent Secretary is Mr. M. F. Sullivan.

Perhaps the most notable debate in this society was on the subject:

Resolved, That the national ownership of railroads would be beneficial to the United States.

The first affirmative, Mr. Joe Lewis, made a most patriotic and well received address, incidentally mentioning railroads in his discourse, and ended by leading, in a fine bass voice, the singing of "America." Mr. Johnson then took the stand with a paper full of arguments. Then Mr. Wilkie arose, and with his Vandyke beard sacrificed in order to give free movement, started in on a burst of magnificent oratory. We were sorry not to hear more of the Chinese wall, but noted with interest the fact that "the cattle are not fit to ride in the passenger coaches in Europe." Whenever Mr. Wilkie’s time expired he was urged to go on by a burst of approval that could not be quelled until finally with a peroration of magnificent magnificence, he sat down in a mantle of Ciceronian glory. The second negative being absent, Mr. Louis Greenberg was elected. We are able to give this gentleman’s speech almost verbatim, the stars representing the words which the frequent bursts of applause prevented the reporter from getting.

"Ladies and Gentlemen: I was asleep during * * * I am * * * but * * * and * * * don’t know * * * therefore * * * on the question * * * have to excuse me." [Great applause.]

At the election for the third term Mr. Richard V. Carpenter was elected president. Shortly after this election another took place for a delegate to the Republican College League. The contest was nearly equal between Mr. Ickes and Mr. Brady. Mr. Ickes sits over by those bad boys who stick pins into each other, monkey with the window poles and whisper during recitation, while Mr. Brady sits among such innocent lambs as Foot-ball Attorney Brand, Real Attorney Bethan, Bloch who sleeps all through recitation, and Dr. Head. Mr. Brady was elected as our delegate. So run the formal annals of our class, "Sic lumbago hypodermic est," as Etteson would say. These are but small compared to the many important happenings during recitation, which are here recorded as a part of the time of the great Common Law:
The time that Br—d was absent. The room was for some reason noticeably quiet that evening.
The time Por—r didn’t ask a question.
The time that Cam—ll said “ouch” and caused the preceptor to remark that he “didn’t want to hear a smile.”
Badenoch, get down off that chair.
The time that Ic—s didn’t skate out early Saturday evening to see his girl.
The time that Wil—ke didn’t want to talk (When was that?)
The time that Har—s missed the train for Joliet.
The time St—rt left that pipe back in Plano and was sad all the evening in consequence.
The time when Ettl—on and Krei—zer agreed upon some point.
Those days long passed when Lang—n used to ask questions.
The time when Bet—n didn’t try to get free legal advice
under the disguise of a hypothetical case.
The ladies—here’s to them; may they get a larger practice than we do right away.
Charley Jones’ mustache, the finest in Chicago.
The interesting scenes in the windows across the alley.
Who is the champion rubber shooter in the back row?
The syllabus committee has caused to be prepared, at a vast expenditure of labor and money, a short compendium of answers, suitable to be used by one not knowing the lesson.
1. If question relates to time, say “A reasonable time.”
2. If to the reason something is not permitted by law, say
“it is against public policy.”
3. If a “third party” appears in the question, talk glibly about “notice, actual or constructive.”
4. The one universal answer suitable to nearly every question, and very popular with the text-book writers, is as follows:
“Well”—(here pretend to be thinking) “some authorities hold the first way, others seem to favor the second reasoning;
but the better opinion seems to be”—(Here insert your own extemporaneous opinion on the subject). These answers, if judiciously applied, will be found very useful.
It may perhaps be permissible to end this string of nonsense with a few words of alleged sense. While there are many amusing things happening in the class-room, and it is upon these that the annalist most readily seize, we must not forget the long hours of patient preparation that these recitations cost, the earnest work of the studious ones, and the glorious ambition that burns in every breast to some day stand, not servile repeaters of an unknown system of jurisprudence, but original researchers in that epitome of all that is free and just and grand in the history of English speaking civilization, the great Common Law.
