DIGNITY TAKINGS
AND DIGNITY RESTORATION

Editor's Note

For its final issue in Volume 92, the Chicago-Kent Law Review has elected to publish an interdisciplinary issue that features authors from a myriad of academic fields, including history, political science, sociology, and urban planning. Given the authors' familiarities with their respective academic fields—and given that scholarly works in many of these fields are peer-reviewed rather than student-reviewed—several authors cite to material that the Law Review is proscribed from reaching. Although the Law Review can attest to the veracity of a majority of each article's sourcework, it cannot fully affirm that all of an article's sources support the related text. As such, the editorial staff has opted to mark each source that it cannot corroborate with an asterisk. In doing so, the Law Review hopes that its readers benefit from an additional layer of transparency, and that the publication can still adhere to rigorous principles of corroboration and academic integrity.
